ARCHITECTURAL SIGNIFICANCE (describe important architectural features and evaluate in terms of other buildings within community)

This two and a half story house is vernacular in style with features commonly seen in the triple decker homes built in urban areas during the early years of the twentieth century. The most noteworthy of these features is the entrance porch and the variety of sloped shingles on the building's exterior.

HISTORICAL SIGNIFICANCE (explain the role owners played in local or state history and how the building relates to the development of the community)

The earliest owner of this house has yet to be documented. It was probably built around the turn of the twentieth century. The earliest owner may have been a relative of Mabel R. Johnson who owned the property in 1924. In 1943 she conveyed the property to Daniel and Mary Knight who have continued in ownership of the property until the present day.
